About NAGW

The National Association of Government Web Professionals (NAGW) is a non-profit organization that supports the interests of public sector communication and technology professionals. Membership is available to full- or part-time employees of qualifying governments, while associate membership may be granted to federal government employees.

NAGW membership has numerous benefits:

Networking

NAGW connects members throughout the country, providing invaluable contacts, while developing close friendships.

NAGW's National Conference provides outstanding opportunities to collaborate with fellow peers, learn from intriguing keynote speakers and interactive sessions and gain insight into some of the most innovative work in government technology.

Learning Opportunities

Free webinars. NAGW members enjoy access to monthly webinars on a variety of topics, keeping them up-to-date on the latest web technologies, techniques and standards.

Resource library. NAGW offers an online, members-only library of code samples, how-to documents, policies and best practices.

Listserv. A great way for web professionals to share information. Listserv participants have the benefit of getting the best advice on any subject from their peers.

NAGW also arranges for various training opportunities and presentations from world renowned speakers.

Discounts

Members enjoy reduced fees on annual conference registration and have access to discounts on industry publications, as well as lower rates on services and educational opportunities.

A single voice usually has little impact on state and national legislation, but the combined voices of web professionals from around the country can have a big effect on laws and policies affecting our web sites and government's use of the Internet.
